The recent Covid-19 crisis with its deep economic impact urges the field of economic anthropology to collect and publish resources on related organizations, associations, and initiatives, and to consider the anthropological contribution to the economic crisis. The journal is especially interested in the anthropological exploration of the economic crisis in the Mediterranean basin, as it faces the most severe effects of the crisis and the most dramatic consequences of austerity and financialisation in terms of poverty and inequality. The journal is open to contributions on a wide range of topics, such as the anthropology of the economy, inequality, and poverty, the anthropology of financialisation, the anthropology of crisis, and the anthropology of austerity.

The journal welcomes contributions on the anthropology of the economy in all its forms, including economic anthropology, postcolonial economic anthropology, and comparative economic anthropology. The journal is also interested in contributions on the anthropology of inequality, poverty, and vulnerability, as well as on the anthropology of financialisation, the anthropology of crisis, and the anthropology of austerity. The journal is open to contributions on the anthropology of the economy in all its forms, including economic anthropology, postcolonial economic anthropology, and comparative economic anthropology. The journal is also interested in contributions on the anthropology of inequality, poverty, and vulnerability, as well as on the anthropology of financialisation, the anthropology of crisis, and the anthropology of austerity.